What are we to set each other to work upon? The young people of the community should not be left to their own devices. They should be directed to the most useful employments, whether it be in agriculture, in the manufacture of cotton, or in some other branch of industry. It is more important to cultivate the land than to be idle. The young people should be taught to value their labor, and to appreciate the fruits of their own toil. They should be encouraged to become useful members of society, and to be content with their station in life.

Some young people are not very industrious, and they often neglect the opportunities that are offered to them. It is necessary to teach them the value of work, and to show them how it may be connected with the duties of life. It is more important to labor in the vineyard than to be idle. The young people should be encouraged to become useful members of society, and to be content with their station in life.

Tiger-Hunt.

We are all of equal strength and ability, but our labors are not equally rewarded. We should be content with our station in life, and be willing to work for our support. It is more important to cultivate the land than to be idle. The young people should be taught to value their labor, and to appreciate the fruits of their own toil.
