Mary: "Why, I'll not go out, I'll not!"

Why will you not go out, my dearest Mary?"

This is the advice of the wise old owl.

The owl says, "If you stay inside, you will be safe."

This advice is from the wise old owl.

Oh, dear Mary, why will you not go out?

Mary: "Oh, dear owl, how wise you are!"

The wise old owl says, "You will be safe if you stay inside."

Mary: "I will go out now."

"Thank you, dear owl."
Here is a poem by a young boy:
What are you doing today?

The sky is empty and blue.

What should I do?

What should I say?

The sky is empty and blue.

What should I do?

What should I say?

The sky is empty and blue.

What should I do? What should I say?

The sky is empty and blue.

What should I do? What should I say?

The sky is empty and blue.

What should I do? What should I say? What should I do?
Book of love

I. Life is but a span
   In the world's wide expanse
   Where all things seem to be
   In harmony and peace.

II. The heart's content
   Is when love's light is seen
   In eyes that sparkle bright
   With joy and happiness.

III. The world is wide
    And many a soul is led
    To seek the path of love
    In every land and place.

IV. Love is sweet and true
    And makes the world come through
    With beauty and delight
    For all who follow in its might.

V. In love's embrace
   The heart is filled with grace
   And all its cares are gone
   As love's sweet song is sung.
May we be like the sun,
We shall shine all day long.

We may bow down or stand,
To show how great we are.

May we take pride in our work,
And in our place of honor.

May we be kind to all,
And in our hearts, do the right.

May we be brave in our life,
And in our journey of the world.

May we be worthy of our trust,
And in our paths, do the right.

We live in houses and parts
Where we in houses and parts
With no one to love or to hate.

We learn to fly in the air
And to walk on the sea.

We live in dreams and in sleep
And to wake at any time.

We learn to be free
And to think in the mind.

We live in houses and parts
Where we in houses and parts
With no one to love or to hate.

The sun
Of a golden brightness gleams
Across the calm and tranquil seas.

The moon,
With her silvery light,
Guides ships through the night.

The stars,
Brilliant and twinkling,
Paint the sky in countless singing.

The wind,
Whispering secrets through the trees,
Caresses the leaves with gentle ease.

The waves,
Rushing with energy,
Carry tales of the ocean's mystery.

The earth,
Beneath our feet,
Teaches us the value of life and health.
All the house and garden
Her white form to the view.
Nor in her heart the love of
Any mortal being knew.

But on the air disposed
The bright of her face, then,
Till the light fell not thereupon
The misty veil of tears.

But as the sun shone forth,
The dark of her converse
Was as the cunning of a
Covetous and froward face.
