and how the tree grew high over the room, how the leaves rustled in the wind, and how the sun shone through the branches. But the children were busy with their own thoughts, not paying much attention to the nature around them. They were more interested in their own explorations and adventures. As they continued to wander, they discovered a small garden tucked away in a corner of the building. The garden was filled with beautiful flowers and a stream that bubbled gently over the rocks. The children spent the rest of the day exploring the garden, marveling at the beauty of nature and the wonder of the world.
